

SAS Bulletin Editor's annual report

Carmen Ting

There has been a constant delay in delivering the bulletin this year, mostly due to the editor's conflicting work schedule. The editor, however, continues to be supported by a team of associate editors. These associated editors cover a wide range of topics, including archaeological ceramics, glass, metal, bioarchaeology, zooarchaeology, archaeobotany and maritime archaeology. Two of our associate editors are currently on paternity leave and due to resume their role later this year. We are still on the outlook to fill in the position of the associate editor for archaeogenetic and geoarchaeology.

The bulletin is currently in the final stage of preparing our second thematic issue, focusing on women in archaeological science, in response to the International Women's Day and the recurrent call for equality and inclusivity in academia in the recent years. To prepare for this issue, the bulletin is working closer with the students' ambassadors, all showing a lot of interest in playing a greater role in contributing to the bulletin in the future.

Andrew Zipkin, our VP for Intersociety Relations, has suggested a potential partnership with the Elsevier's Social Science Research Network, with the aim of raising the visibility of our bulletin.
