

Annual report of the SAS bulletin

Carmen Ting, Editor of the bulletin

There have been some major changes to the bulletin in the past year, most noticeable in the structure and the members of the editorial team, as well as the format. Initially, the bulletin only covers seven topics, including ceramics, bioarchaeology, archaeogenetics, maritime archaeology, geoarchaeology, remote sensing and prospection, and book reviews. While book reviews have been dropped, we have expanded the topics to be covered in the bulletin, which also means that we have added some new faces to the editorial board. The new topics and new faces are as follows:

Agnese Benzonelli, Associate editor of archaeometallurgy

Thibaut Deviese, Associate editor of archaeological organic materials

Mark Golitko, Associate editor of lithic studies and network analysis

Evi Margaritis, Associate editor of archaeobotany

Artemios Oikonomou, Associate editor of archaeological glass and vitreous materials

Roxanne Radpour, Associate editor of archaeological pigments

Laerke Recht, Associate editor of zooarchaeology

We are hoping that these latest additions will provide a more vivid reflection of how diverse the field of archaeological sciences has become. At the same time, we are regretted to announce that Rebecca Gibson and David Hill have left the editorial team; and we would like to take this opportunity to thank them once again for their contributions. Thanks should also be extended to other members of the editorial team, who have been supporting the bulletin tirelessly throughout all these years, and will continue to contribute to the furtherance of the life of the bulletin. Their support has been essential to the success of transforming the format of presentation of the bulletin, from the paper one to a more timely, online presence. As of now, the editors will source the contributions, which could be book or conference reviews and/or up-to-date research, which will then be posted on our blog (<https://socarchsci.blogspot.com>) as they come in. The posts will be summarised and collated into the e-bulletin, which will be circulated among the SAS members quarterly.